In general, the partisan question is not worthy of much attention. It is known that for some time reports on the subject have been exaggerated. These reports go back to the time when Greek bands, united in groups, were put up in various camps in Hungary. These units were broken up in mid-1950 and their individual members were assigned as workmen to the various state enterprises.

At Hajdubösszörmenyi, in "Bösszörmenyi városi erdö", there is a large military camp with 60 wooden barracks. Since last mid-May, this camp has been occupied by Hungarian recruits (translator's note: incorrect term used in the original) who were recalled for 3 months for training. It is easy to understand how these people, before getting into uniform, must first wait over a week during which time they still wear civilian clothes and thus are mistaken for partisans. Throughout Hungary at present there is no partisan movement. All reports of the use of partisans must be considered as a conscious attempt at deception.

The Hajdúböszörmenyi camp can accommodate about 6,000 men.

The newly recalled men — according to the announcement for a period of 3 months — are persons who had already served in the old Hungarian army but had not served in the new army.

These recalls have been extended to the class of 1902. In each division training units have been formed; they are housed on the premises previously occupied
